For real indeed has a kind of slangy/childish connotation, which I'm sure is why it was used in the title of that movie (a quick Google search reveals that the film is about a four-year-old who has a near-death experience).. However, it also does not mean the same thing as real: if something is real, it exists, while if something is for real, it is legitimate.

grammar - Saying something is "for real" vs just saying ...

Language evolves. This has come to mean: search for a particular web site or thing on the Internet. This is a little different from "look it up" which could be in an address book or other index. And quite different from "search for" which indicates that you don't know if you will find it. Of course, it is colloquial.
